As long as you are attending BYU in Fall 2018 you will receive no further instruction, however you will still receive academic and fee support, which may be obtained through my Scholarship Subscriptions for Fall: gofundme.com/junky-college-reform-program-program.html. The scholarship portion includes a $10 scholarship to BYU. On top of those expenses, you will receive one full full semester of scholarship support at the end of your semester. See the link on the school's web site for more details. At Brigham Young University you will need to pay tuition at the current rates and expenses at your current institution under BYU's Academic Assistance Programs (AFAP). Students residing under a one month student loan agreement (e-loan forgiveness option), a one year-to-one student loan agreement (academic support assistance option), a one-time waiver of a tuition refund and a 1 year post term loan agreement are not eligible for BYU credits. I have a BYU Tenderloan from my spouse and two University funds. I must have each of our undergraduate scholarships in order to receive additional support on those dates. This tuition assistance program can vary substantially, but at least one year is usually available in excess of their student loan agreement repayment date. (In order to qualify for a credit for this term, my spouse and two students must meet both of my primary income and total income requirements through an income-contribution plan or qualify for student financial aid through my student loans. In order to get our primary financial aid through student financial aid, you must be 21 years of age in order to complete the application required by BYU Athletics. You also must have served the entire semester at BYU. To learn more make some contact with your BYU academic program advisor on BYU scholarships or visit their support center at your state campus (i.e., BYU's College of Professional Studies at the Provo Campus, and their campus coordinator program for student scholarships). Be sure to check out the BYU Website for more information including resources and information for students and the state of Utah. Some students may consider an associate degree while on their Tenderloan. Additionally we offer various other credits through BYU, which makes college a natural choice, as are a number of other scholarships I accept as payment for my college education, some of which I apply on my own because of the unique nature of the program and financial aid choices available during my tenure as BYU head director (also available: 1) an Associate Degree for IEP, 2) a D2 Bachelor's degree or 3) Doctor of Business Administration, in addition to applying as an Associate or Director of Accountancy with any other University of Utah institution within the United States.
